Adam and Eve – Marriage grounded in creation, not culture

In the beginning—before the Supreme Court, before America, before the church, before Israel, before culture, before sin—God created humanity. He formed the first man, Adam, and the first woman, Eve. Their union is the first marriage, created, defined, and blessed by God at the dawn of time. Marriage is not a cultural invention but a divine institution grounded in creation itself. God spoke the first legal-formula for marriage: “Therefore a man shall leave his father and mother and hold fast to his wife, and they shall become one flesh” (Genesis 2:24).

This first marriage reveals the enduring blessings of companionship, procreation, and shared vocation—the very structure of human society. Yet from the moment sin entered the world, God’s design has been strained by conflict, pain, and disordered desires. Adam and Eve blamed rather than repented. Work and childbirth were marked by suffering. Still, into that brokenness God spoke a promise—a Savior who would restore what sin had shattered.

Through the cross, Christ heals the wounds between husband and wife. He restores the dignity of the one-flesh union. He empowers forgiveness and strengthens believers to resist cultural pressures. The marriage of Adam and Eve remains the pattern God upholds and redeems for all time.

The Lutheran Center for Religious Liberty advocates for traditional marriage.
