To Life

She had just reached the 23rd week of her pregnancy when she was admitted to the hospital. After evaluating her, the doctors advised that the baby should be aborted. She refused. Moments later, her underweight infant was rushed to the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit. The parents were told the odds were overwhelmingly against their child and that they should prepare themselves for the inevitable.

Prepare they did. They surrounded him with the best medical care available, welcomed him into a loving family, and stormed heaven with prayers for his life.

Today, that child is preparing to graduate Magna Cum Laude from high school. He holds a job, and he is excited to use his scholarship to pursue higher education. It was a long, difficult battle—one his parents chose willingly.

The elderly gentleman lay on an ER table. The nurse taking his blood pressure wondered if the machine was malfunctioning; the numbers were far too low to sustain life. He was transferred to the ICU with little hope for survival. Once again, the family rallied in prayer, and the doctors applied their skill. Today, that same man enjoys cutting his grass and traveling.

It was another long, hard battle—one his family fought for life.
